About astragon Entertainment GmbH and astragon Sales & Services GmbH

The foundation for today's astragon group was laid in 1998 by André Franzmann with the establishment of rondomeia Marketing & Vertriebs GmbH. The subsidiary astragon Software GmbH was then founded in 2000 by CEO and co-partner Dirk Walner, and the two companies initially operated largely independently. In the following years, both companies established themselves as successful game publishers, rondomeia focusing on casual games and secondary releases, and astragon focusing on simulation games. For both publishers, the thematic focus has moved in the same direction in recent years – the development and publishing of simulation games and the distribution of casual games and individual products from other genres. In addition to the distribution of licensed titles, the focus is now also on developing their own titles. In recent years, both companies have also successfully exploited the mobile sector, i.e. games for smartphones and tablets.

So it made sense to increase cooperation, to pool resources and to pursue a unified market presence. The result is the astragon group, which has operated jointly since August 2015 with a new unified logo.

The decision to continue under the subsidiary's name astragon is down to the emphasis on simulations. astragon stands for simulations like hardly any other brand – a topic to which the new astragon group will devote itself to an even greater extent than before. The former rondomedia now operates under the name astragon Sales & Services GmbH, dedicating itself to retail marketing. The former astragon now operates under the name astragon Entertainment GmbH, and will focus primarily on publishing and international marketing.
