Wunderlich offers frame protectors for Boxer models

The central design of the current Roadster, Sport and Adventure Boxers from BMW is unmistakable. The mandatory bridge frame with a trellis design connects behind the distinctive boxer engine. As lightweight and durable as this frame is, it has one main drawback: the pipes end in unsightly openings. Not only are they rather unattractive, they get dirty quickly and corrosion nests form.

Wunderlich, the BMW accessory specialist, knows to prevent this in the long term. The Sinzig-based company uses high-quality, resistant covers made of a special, black hard rubber material to close the visually unappealing frame openings and to significantly contribute to the preservation of the boxer models' value.

The reliably positioned cover frames are available as a complete 11-part set for the current R 1200 GS, or as a three-part set for the current R 1200 R and RS. The set costs €49.90 and is Made in Germany. Wunderlich also offers a five-year warranty for it. A two-part set, which costs €4.90, is also available for the ends of the tank protection bar of the R 1200 GS Adventure.
